

Summary

The regulation of the institution of branch commercial proxy will soon celebrate its twenty-year anniversary and, despite its shortcomings, it has not been amended so far. Defining the limits of the powers of proxy verba legis: „to the scope of matters entered in the register of the enterprise’s branch” in a situation where the National Court Register (KRS) does not provide for the possibility of assigning a specific category of matters to the branch of the enterprise, and the Central Registry and Information about Business Activities (CEIDG) does not mention the enterprise’s branch at all, but only the „permanent additional place of business” raises significant interpretation doubts. This state of affairs creates an appropriate research field on the standardization and functioning of the branch commercial proxy. Based on the analysis of the normative material and the practice of applying the applicable regulations, the work indicates whether the intervention of the legislator is necessary and whether the existing problems can be solved through the interpretation of the regulations. Therefore, the work includes appropriate conclusions de lege lata and de lege ferenda in this respect.
